

"MAX"

Diagnosis: delayed development (3 year old male)

Chief complaint: chronic runny nose, sensory problems in mouth, behavioral problems, not vocalizing

History of Present Illness: Mother breast fed him briefly, but when switched to formula, his chronic ear infections, copious mucus production, constant drooling and runny nose all began. Tubes were placed in his ears to drain accumulating fluid. Later, as a toddler, he existed on large quantities of milk for nutrition, due to his sensory issues making him reject most other foods.

Past Medical History: Mother had a "problem pregnancy" and Max was slow to thrive from the start.

Medications: None. Is taking a daily Flintstone "Gummy" vitamin

Labs: In May of 2006, Max was tested with Metamatrix, Inc.'s Food Antibodies 90 panel. He showed a moderate (class 4) reaction to milk and a moderate (class 2) reaction to casein. See test report excerpt below.

Since taking Max off cow's milk and switching him to soymilk for drinking, his "entire condition has improved" according to his mom. All drooling and runny nose has disappeared. Cognitive skills are improving rapidly, as well as gross motor skills. Ears have cleared up and all signs of "allergy" are gone.

After two months in pre-school, his mother thought she'd try to put him back on cow's milk. Within days, he became "aggressive and sluggish". When he was placed back on soy milk, he became normal again. His therapists noticed the changes as well and noted a sharp increase in his ability when mom re-introduced soy milk.

As of today, 3/15/07, Max is still progressing well and still shows no signs of the allergy. He continues to improve in all ways.
